

Man cites safety concerns when wife looks to botox

PRODUCED BY THE ADVERTISING DEPARTMENT OF TPC HOLDINGS

DEAR ABBY: My wife is a very attractive 56. For years she has wanted Botox treatments. Recently, it has become more serious because she feels she looks like a grandmother. I (and others) continue to tell her how great she looks, especially when she dresses up

I also tell her Botox is require subsequent treatments. Additionally, with each treatment, she will risk potential problems of infection, allergic reaction or medical mistakes. I remind her of the treatments that have gone wrong and that none of those women went to their doctors asking to look like a retired boxer.

At this point, I'm concerned she may be depressed about aging and wants to do something to improve her looks, but I'm standing in her way. I love her just as she is, and I don't want her to do anything that ultimately could do damage. To me, the ultimate "depression" would be doing something harmful that can't be corrected. Please advise me. -- LOVES HER THE WAY

SHE IS DEAR LOVES: You clearly adore your wife and want what is best for her. That's why you should consider scheduling a consultation for BOTH of you with a board-certified dermatologist who can explain the benefits and risks of using Botox. It may put some of your concerns to rest.

When administered by a medical professional, there is little risk of a bad outcome. While you are correct that the effects last only a few months, Botox is popular among women in her age group and those even younger. The only drawback is that it isn't cheap. (During your discussion, you may other products that are available and last longer, such as fillers.)

DEAR ABBY: I let a short-term fix and will a friend who was going through a hard time stay on my couch when he would get too drunk to drive. Eleven years later, LOST he's still here. I told him from the beginning not to get hooked or fall in love with me, because I knew I would never feel the same.

He has taken over my home with his collections but won't sell anything. He also doesn't pay any bills. I do not like his drinking. I am sober. He yells and screams for sex, but I don't give in. I told him he needs to move on.

I'm on disability and a fixed income. Legal eviction? Restraining order? Medical Equipment He has threatened to walk away and leave me to deal with all his junk. Help! --INVADED IN MISSOURI
